Hello We all know that following the laws established by the legislature to protect the environment and the Penobscot Nation can be very challenging. It is still the law and Maine State government is obligated to follow those laws. The fact that so much waste continues to be shipped in from out-of-state--after years of public objection to these practices--illustrate that the state is not representing the people. As we know, Cassella has deep pockets and their lobbyists and lawyers end up with more clout than the public interest. Which generation of Maine State government will actually do the right thing? This one?
