Any planned rule that makes it more difficult for Mainers to purchase gasoline powered vehicles is out of touch with reality. Conditions that exist in this state make the use of EVs both unacceptable and dangerous, particularly in winter when one could be easily caught out in a blizzard for hours at zero degrees. The headlong rush to attain net zero carbon emissions is foolhardy and totally unnecessary. Yes, there is climate change occurring. There has always been climate change, and there will always be climate change. However to blame it on man's activities is beyond ridiculous. Unless you want a revolt on your hands such as has not yet been experienced, you should rethink this rulemaking fallacy.
