EV FAILURES

As a previous business owner in contracting, I have researched these EVs, and they are all hype, and can be dangerous. You can't put electricity in a 5 gallon can. These will not perform well in Maine's cold weather. And they are dangerous. Watch these 22 short videos, you need to pause this for a number of years. I spoke to Eric Kennedy, and he says you are just blindly following California. And they have already warned people not to charge these during peak hours, not to mention use air-conditioning!! The grid is not ready for these things, and they are not ready for Maine winter weather either!!

Message: I studied house wiring in shop class, electronics at PRVTC in Portland, Maine in high school, house wiring in Job Corps, and hobbied in electronics starting in 1969, when I was 11, when I was already studying electronics at home before I ever went to high school by books I bought at Radio Shack. I designed and installed a 6 function telephone phone bugging system in my parents house in 1969, and wired up our new garage that we all built ourselves, in 1974, when I was 16. And used the same basic design in the system that I used on the state police case. As well as house wiring in Job Corps, and have 10,000 field hours in the general field of electrical and electronics. And you could not pay me to own one of these glorified golf carts!! Electric heat is a huge draw, so driving these things any distance in the winter would be a break down nightmare. Your mileage is cut by 1/2 to 2/3 while towing, and then more if you run the heat and lights!! Its a cute toy, and nothing more!! And these 22 videos will prove that!! Robert Pelletier.
