Dear Air Quality Bureau Cayting,

Maine does not have the infrastructure in place to support the adoption of California's Advanced Clean Truck Rules. Lawmakers in Maine should not allow California lawmakers to craft our regulations and rather think for themselves and do what's right for the people of the Maine who have elected them. Investment in more expensive trucks, charging stations, and meeting the demand for power through transmission and delivery upgrades will cost Maine businesses. New EV trucks are not currently equipped to handle additional equipment like snowplows, dump bodies, cranes, and other important tools. The uncertainty of adopting the CA ACT before important questions are answered will create chaos in an already fragile supply chain, and consumers/taxpayers will end up paying higher prices.

Sincerely,

Andrew Kittredge
