As someone who works in the logging industry, this ruling would put me and many others out of a job.

As it stands now the equipment would only work at a mill where it has readily available charging capacity but out in the woods, the loggers are sometimes several hours away from a paved road let alone power lines. They would have no way of charging these machines.

We also live an hour and a half away from the closest city center. How can we be assured that the infrastructure of the state i.e. food etc. doesn't fall completely apart?

I would love to see clean energy but it must be viable. Provide a solution don't mandate a problem.
