Transition Assessment

Transition assessments are an important component of the transition planning process. Transition assessments assist the student in exploring their preferences, interests, needs and strengths to aide in writing their Postsecondary Transition Plan (PTP). This guide will provide information regarding transition assessment compliance, definition, examples, and resources.

*Results from initial assessments should be the starting point for transition planning and remain the driving force for determining individual services.
(Rowe D., et. al., 2015)*

Individual Education Plan (IEP) and Postsecondary Transition Plan (PTP) Compliance

“The IEP must include appropriate measurable postsecondary goals based upon age-appropriate transition assessments related to training, education, employment, and where appropriate, independent living skills.”

34 CFR 300.320(b)(1), IDEA

The Postsecondary Transition Plan (PTP) is a web-based application used to complete and document the transition planning process at the IEP meeting. In Wisconsin it is required to start this process for all students with disabilities ages 14 and older. When creating the student’s PTP, there is a question specifically regarding transition assessments that must be answered. If a transition assessment is not completed at the time of the annual IEP meeting, the IEP team will not be able to move forward with the student’s postsecondary transition planning.

✓ Has an age-appropriate transition assessment been completed? Yes No

✓ Has the team reviewed information from the student's Academic Career Planning process? Yes No

The IEP team may identify in the box below the methods and/or the results of the assessment.

What is Transition Assessment?

“Transition assessment is an ongoing process of collecting information on the student’s strengths, needs, preferences, and interests as they relate to the demands of current and future living, learning, and working environments. This process begins at age 14 or earlier and will continue until the student graduates or exits high school. Information from this process is used to drive the IEP and transition planning process and to help develop the Summary of Performance (SoP) document detailing the student’s academic and functional performance and postsecondary goals.” (adapted from: Sitlington, P. L., Neubert, D. A., Begun, W. H., Lombard, R. C., & Leconte, P. J. (2007). Assess for success: A practitioner’s handbook on transition assessment (2nd ed.). Thousand Oaks, CA: Corwin Press. p. 2-3)

Transition Assessment:

What Does this Effectively Look Like?

Age Appropriate

Assessments are:

- "Student centered" and take into account student's chronological age
- Assessments focus on the student’s preferences, interests, needs and strengths (PINS)
- Assessments include the student's input but may also include input from the student's family, educators, peers, community members or agencies working with the student

On-Going

Assessments include:

- Monitoring to collect data on progress towards post school outcomes
- Planning to meet youth's changing preferences, interests, needs and strengths in transition domains
- Instruction to youth and family on how to use results in the IEP and SoP

Neubert, D. , Leconte, P. (2013)

Measurable Postsecondary Goals

Foundation for creating postsecondary goals in these areas:

- Education/Training
- Employment
- Independent Living (as needed)

Transition Assessment

Will Answer these Three Questions

- ✓ Where is the student presently?
- ✓ Where is the student going?
- ✓ How will you get there?

If the three questions above cannot be answered with the transition assessments being used, then information must continue to be collected until a strong knowledge of the student's preferences, interests, needs and strengths are obtained to create a meaningful postsecondary transition plan.

Transition assessment begins well before the IEP team meeting to ensure meaningful, high quality information is available for the IEP team to consider. These assessments can be formal or informal.

- Formal assessments generally are more standardized or paper/pencil type assessments. Some examples of this are intelligence tests or aptitude surveys. Often these types of assessments are given by a professional with a license or certification to administer this type of assessment.
- Informal assessments are not standardized and do not require specialization to use and are often free. There is more subjectivity in this process and best used for ongoing assessment. As you can see in the following chart, informal assessments offer a lot of variety and creativity to meet the needs of the student.

Formal	Informal
<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Adaptive behavior and independent living assessments• Aptitude tests• Interest inventories• Intelligence tests• Achievement tests• Personality or preference tests• Career development measures• On the job training evaluations• Measures of self-determination	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Interviews• Questionnaires• Direct observations• Environmental or situational Assessments• Curriculum-based assessments• Interest inventories• Preference assessments• Transition planning inventories• Discovery process

In rare cases, the student will be unable or unwilling to discuss their own, preferences, interests, needs or strengths. In these instances, age-appropriate transition assessments may be based on educator observations, input from the student's family, or information contained in the student's records or through the Discovery Process.

Transition Assessment Using Assessment Results

“Transition assessment is an essential process to identify student’s individualized postsecondary goals, determine necessary transition services to strive for such goals during the transition period and lead the IEP team in making sound instructional decisions.” (Rowe et al. 2015)

As defined, transition assessment is ongoing, so it is more than “one” assessment, it is a process and is interconnected with other educational assessments, family input and the student’s connections outside of school. One of the important school connections is to the Academic and Career Planning (ACP) process. Transition assessment results and the ACP together build strong foundations for individualized and relevant transition planning.

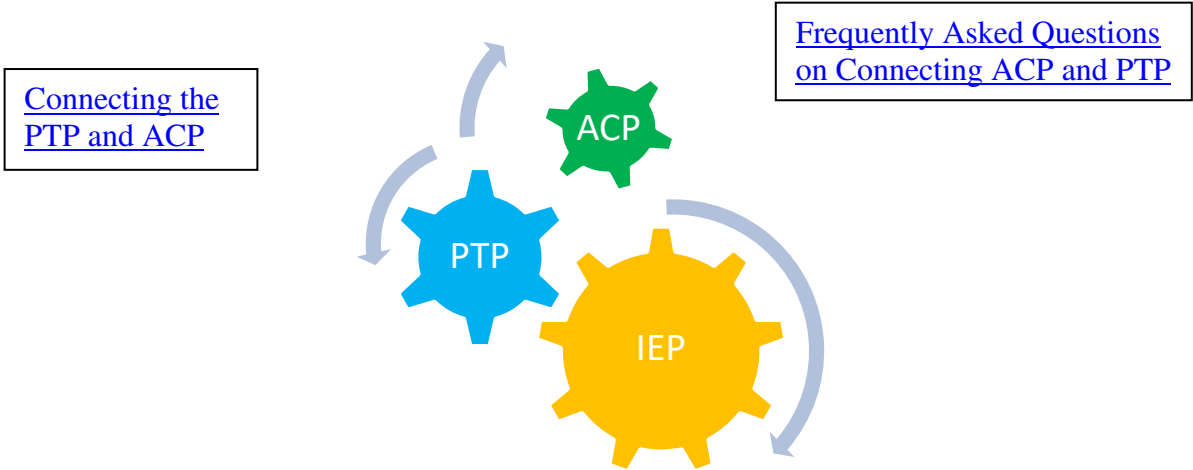

The Transition Assessment process provides the foundation for:

Transition Assessment IEP, PTP and Academic and Career Planning (ACP)

As transition assessment is being discussed at the IEP meeting there is a question in the PTP that addresses if the IEP team has reviewed information from the student’s Academic and Career Plan or ACP. The ACP may be helpful and should be reviewed as part of the postsecondary transition planning process. All students will have an ACP starting in the 6th grade (most students will have this in place prior to their first transition plan) and at the age of 14, these two plans will work together. In fact, a robust ACP can fulfill many of the transition services identified in the student’s PTP. The assessments that are being completed during this ACP process should be considered valuable information to share at the transition IEP meetings, however, they are not the only assessments to consider in developing the student’s PTP. These processes link, enhance and inform each other! Finding links between the two can create environments where all students graduate college, career and community ready!

Transition Improvement Grant (TIG) Postsecondary Transition Plan (PTP) Examples

The PTP examples below reflect effective transition assessment and how it ties into creating the measurable postsecondary goals, transition services and course of study. The middle school and high school examples show how “ongoing” assessment drives transition planning.

Age-Appropriate Transition Assessments and Resources

Any single assessment will not provide a comprehensive set of information that can be used for transition planning (Rowe et. al. 2015). Fortunately transition assessments and resources are vast, varied and available in many different platforms. Below is a listing of transition assessments and resources organized into transition planning areas.

The Wisconsin Transition Improvement Grant does not endorse or recommend these resources, but only shares them, in no order, as a convenient source of information. Linked sites are not under the control of the Wisconsin Transition Improvement Grant.

Transition Tennessee and Indiana University websites provide a robust list of transition assessments. Both sites provide the user with the ability to filter by transition area, age and type of assessment to best match a student’s needs.

Transition Tennessee: Assessment Data Base

A comprehensive data base of transition assessments that utilizes filters across transition domains, assessment focus, assessment approach, language, who completes it and cost.

Indiana University Transition Resource Center: Transition Assessment Matrix

Resource tools that reflect transition assessments to be used during community-based instruction, in a career/technical education classroom/program, and throughout a student’s school year. Assessments can be filtered by employment, education, independent living, grade level, language, and level of support needs.
