

brochure excerpts

WHY Bees and other pollinators are essential to a healthy environment, yet are declining in many places. Eighty-five percent of flowering plants, including many crops, need a pollinator to reproduce. As much as one-third of our food supply relies on the work of bees. Beyond farms, pollinators are a vital part of our ecosystems.

Writing U4 W6 D2

Focus on Second/ 2nd Grade for ME | Boston Public Schools Department of Early Childhood P-2/
Maine Department of Education