Nate Ghiglieri – Sanford Junior High School

The question I really have is, the first question is how are we going to go about testing for the social studies standards throughout middle school or at the high school level? The second question I have is whether or not we are going to be requiring social studies to be similar to the other subjects of ELA and science and math and having kids in high school to graduate with a four year level in U.S. History, Civics, personal financial literacy, or economics? I had another question as far as whether or not we are going to have standards are they going to be set at different grade levels like 6th being U.S. History or 7th being Civics and how we might do that so kids that are transient in the state of Maine they can move to another district and a teacher would easily be able to pick up with that kid so they would not be behind. How much support will come from the state when it comes down to professional development for the teachers in regards to social studies?
