The number of jobs continues to gradually rise.
Job growth picked up modestly in the last 12 months after slowing through the middle of 2017.
The number of employer establishments is rising
The rise in average wages has slowed
The gap with the nation on household income has lessened recently.
We expect job growth to continue to be concentrated in occupations that pay at the upper and lower ends of the earnings spectrum with somewhat fewer in the middle...
...Though the distribution of jobs by median hourly wage is only expected to change marginally.
