Commissioner  Burbank clarified that for many mental health cases, many are dismissed before  a hearing which might cause the average voucher amount to be low. Director  Andrus indicated that the Audit Division will be looking at low voucher values  as well to identify areas of concern. Director Andrus added that the RFP for a  new case management system is forthcoming and a new system will help with  the issue of companion vouchers that artificially reduce the voucher average.  Director Andrus provided the security agreement that all Commission staff will  agreeing to as well as the form to be used for Commission assigned counsel.  Director Andrus reported that there is still no agreement with the Judicial  Branch about sharing quality of service issues about rostered counsel with the  Commission. | Chapter 301  Rulemaking  Discussion | Commissioner Alexander proposed several changes to the amended Chapter  301, including changing the presumptive maximums for several criminal and  juvenile categories and increase the minimum fee for LOD appearances. |  |
| Commission Carey moved to approve Chapter 301 as amended by |  |  |
| Commissioner Alexander. Commissioner Cummins seconded. A discussion |  |  |
| ensued about whether the term "attorney" or "counsel" should be used, with |  |  |

|  | Ruffner stated that this highlighted the need for LOD training about how to  make the appropriate objections. Attorney Ruffner urged the Commission to  adopt a policy that co-counsel is allowed in every case. Addressing  Commissioner Alexander's proposal, Attorney Ruffner suggested that a contract  based on $80 per hour will not attract a lot of interest and just changing the  timing of payment does not really help. Attorney Ruffner urged the Commission  to have a discussion about solving the information gap that exists and suggested  having a person in each judicial district authorized by the Commission to  address the information gap. |  |
| Executive Session | Commissioner Carey moved to go into executive session pursuant to 1 MRS  section 405(6)(e) to discuss the Commission's legal rights and duties with  counsel. Commissioner Alexander seconded. No votes taken. |  |

CONTINUOUS REPRESENTATION

TO: MCILS ELIGIBLE COUNSEL

FROM: JUSTIN W. ANDRUS, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
SUBJECT: CONTINUOUS REPRESENTATION
DATE: $\quad 11 / 5 / 2021$

CC:
COMMISSION

I. Basis

MCILS approves and administers the assignment of individual attorneys to represent indigent clients, and, where appropriate, assigns counsel to represent clients directly. In criminal cases, assignments made by the Court are made under Rule 44. Rule 44 contemplates the assignment of counsel as individuals. For civil cases, Rule 88 adopts the provisions of criminal Rule 44. The individual attorney assigned by the Court or by MCILS to represent an indigent client is responsible to MCILS for all services rendered to that client and for all billing claimed for those services during the period of the assignment.

Except as qualified below, the attorney assigned to represent an indigent client shall personally provide direct representation to the client at all substantive appearances. Notwithstanding the exceptions set forth below, the attorney assigned to represent an indigent client shall personally ensure the adequacy of all phases of representation and the accuracy of billing submitted to MCILS for that representation.

Continuous representation is a fundamental principle of an effective public defense delivery system:

ABA Ten Principles of A Public Defense Delivery System - Principle 7:

The same attorney continuously represents the client until completion of the case. Often referred to as "vertical representation," the same attorney should continuously represent the client from initial assignment through the trial and sentencing. The attorney assigned for the direct appeal should represent the client throughout the direct appeal.
"Continuous representation from appointment through disposition," ABA Principle 7, requires that the same attorney initially appointed to a case continuously represent the defendant through disposition of the case. Commonly referred to as "vertical representation," the continuous representation by the same attorney is contrasted with "horizontal representation" - a representational scheme whereby one attorney represents the client during one court proceeding before handing off the client's case to another attorney to cover the next stage.

As the American Bar Association explains, "horizontal representation" is uniformly implemented as a cost-saving measure in the face of excessive workloads and to the detriment of clients. In fact, the ABA rejects the use of horizontal representation in any form, stating specifically that: "[c]ounsel initially provided should continue to represent the defendant throughout the trial court proceedings and should preserve the defendant's right to appeal, if necessary."

In explaining why horizontal representation is so harmful to clients, the ABA states:
Defendants are forced to rely on a series of lawyers and, instead of believing they have received fair treatment, may simply feel that they have been "processed by the system." This form of representation may be inefficient as well because each new attorney must begin by familiarizing himself or herself with the case and the client must be re- interviewed. Moreover, when a single attorney is not responsible for the case, the risk of substandard representation is probably increased. Appellate courts confronted with claims of ineffective assistance of counsel have commented critically on stage[d] representation practices.

The nexus between the requirement that trial counsel be appointed as early as possible and the requirement that the attorney who is appointed initially to represent the client remains with that client's case through to completion is to ensure that the minimum level of advocacy necessary to mount a meaningful defense commences as soon as possible. In defender systems relying on horizontal representation schemes, the delay in appointing the actual trial lawyer has negative consequences for the client, as exculpatory evidence like video tapes are routinely destroyed within days, physical evidence like bruises fade away quickly, and witnesses can become harder and harder to track down. (The Right to Counsel in Maine - Evaluation of Services Provided by the Maine Commission on Indigent Legal Services, pp. 53-54)

II. Policy

A. An attorney may delegate tasks related to the representation of an assigned client to another attorney only to the extent consistent with the assigned attorney's duties to the client under the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Maine, the Maine Rules of Professional Responsibility, applicable MCILS practice standards, and to the extent consistent with this policy. The assigned attorney is nevertheless responsible to MCILS and to the client individually for all services provided by any attorney during the period of the assignment, and for all billing claimed for those services.
B. Except as set out below, an assigned attorney may not delegate substantive appearances to another attorney. Substantive appearances include, without limitation: bail hearings; motions hearings; dispositional conferences; adjudicatory hearings; jury selection; trial; sentencing; commitment hearings; appellate oral argument; hearings on preliminary protective orders; jeopardy hearings; judicial reviews; and hearings on petitions for termination of parental rights. The assigned attorney shall personally ensure that clients and all witnesses have notice of and are prepared for each proceeding.
C. Delegation of those substantive appearances in which delegation may be appropriate shall occur only as follows:

1. Questions related to the delegation of substantive appearances will be resolved from a client-centric perspective.
2. Delegation of substantive appearances shall be an exception to the expectation that assigned counsel will personally provide continuous representation of assigned clients.
3. Delegation of substantive appearances may be made only to counsel who have been designated eligible to receive assignments of the applicable case type.
4. Delegation of substantive appearances shall be made only with informed client consent.
a. "Informed consent" means a person's agreement to a proposed course of conduct after the lawyer has communicated adequate information and explanation about the material risks of and reasonably available alternatives to the proposed course of conduct. Whether a client has given informed consent to representation shall be determined in light of the mental capacity of the client to give consent, the explanation of the advantages and risks involved provided by the lawyer seeking consent, the circumstances under which the explanation was provided and the consent obtained, the experience of the client in legal matters generally, and any other circumstances bearing on whether the client has made a reasoned and deliberate choice.
5. In the context of delegation of an appearance for an assigned client, informed client consent shall include informed consent from the client to reveal those confidences and secrets as are necessary to the delegated representation.
a. "Confidence" refers to information protected by the attorney-client privilege under applicable law, and "secret" refers to other information relating to the representation if there is a reasonable prospect that revealing the information will adversely affect a material interest of the client or if the client has instructed the lawyer not to reveal such information.
6. Assigned counsel shall document the client's informed consent prior to delegating an appearance. Where possible that informed consent shall be in a writing signed by the client. Counsel shall maintain documentation of consent and shall provide it to MCILS on request.
D. Assigned counsel shall not delegate hearings on dispositive motions, jury selection, trials, sentencing hearings, summary preliminary hearings, jeopardy hearings, contested judicial reviews, hearings on petitions for termination of parental rights, or appellate oral arguments.

If an attorney cannot appear to represent a client at an appearance for which delegation is prohibited, counsel may, with informed client consent, seek the assignment of co-counsel in the matter. Where appropriate and permitted by rule, the appearance of co-counsel may be limited.

Good afternoon, counsel.

I have received feedback from some of you explaining that the MCILS policy I promulgated to ensure that clients receive the benefit of vertical representation was unworkable as drafted. I have done my best to amend that policy to something that is both workable and consistent with the rights of indigent clients. To that end, I have attached an amended policy regarding payment and Defender Data, eliminating the section on vertical representation, and a new policy regarding delegation, and how and when a case may be delegated. I have also attached a sample informed client consent document that you may use if you choose. You may also create your own documents.

It is the policy of MCILS that assignments are to a particular lawyer, and that the assigned lawyer must serve the client in all but unusual circumstances. We recognize that there are instances where delegation may be required, however. In this policy we have differentiated between those matters that may be delegated, and those that may not. We have confirmed that instances of delegation must begin with documented informed client consent. You must maintain documentation of that consent in your file.

AMENDED MCILS POLICY AS TO ASSIGNMENTS, BILLING SYSTEMS, AND PAYMENT

TO: MCILS ELIGIBLE COUNSELFROM: JUSTIN W.ANDRUSSUBJECT: MCILS POLICY AS TO ASSIGNMENTS, BILLING SYSTEMS, AND PAYMENTDATE: AMENDED 11/5/2021CC:COMMISSION

The Maine Commission on Indigent Legal Services (MCILS) adopts the following policy as to assignments, its billing system, and payments, effective October 1, 2021, except to the extent that a later date is specified for specific provisions.

Summary: Through this policy, MCILS restates that indigent clients are assigned to specific assigned counsel, and that those counsel bear individual responsibility for those clients from both a professional responsibility perspective, and from a fiscal perspective from the point of first contact with the client through the final resolution of the matter, or until relived by the Court or the appearance of successor counsel. MCILS restates its financial relationships to the attorneys who are assigned to represent indigent defendants and to any law office or firm for whom any attorney works. MCILS clarifies the permissible use of its billing system.

I. The financial relationship between MCILS and assigned counsel

MCILS shall be responsible for ensuring that payment for services rendered to an assigned client are made to the assigned attorney, or to the person or entity designated by the assigned attorney, consistent with its then current rules. It shall be the responsibility of the assigned attorney to account for and allocate payment made for services rendered to an assigned client during the period of the assignment to any other person or entity to whom the assigned attorney may have any responsibility. Effective November 1, 2021, MCILS shall not be responsible to any attorney or firm, other than the designated person or entity, for the allocation of fees, except to the extent set out in this document.

The person or entity designated to receive payment from MCILS may be either the individual attorney or that attorney's single member entity; or, may be a firm or individual by whom the attorney is employed or in which the attorney is a member, partner, or shareholder. If an attorney designates an individual or entity other than that attorney to receive payment, and subsequently designates another individual or entity to receive payment, MCILS will direct payment to the designated individual or entity immediately on receipt and acknowledgment of the change. Issues of allocation of those payments, and any recourse related thereto, shall be strictly the responsibility of the attorneys and/or entities involved.

Beginning November 1, 2021, MCILS shall pay all fees claimed for any services provided to any assigned client to the most recent person or entity designated by the individual attorney assigned to represent that client. MCILS will presume that each individual attorney has designated that attorney as the person to be paid, except that for those attorneys who have designated another person or entity to receive payment prior to the publication date of this memorandum, that designated vendor will continue to receive payments on behalf of the individual attorney until the individual attorney designates a new vendor to receive payment.

MCILS will direct payment when a voucher is submitted based on the identity of the attorney assigned to represent the client in the matter in question at that time, and the designation made by that attorney. It is the responsibility of assigned counsel to ensure that a voucher is submitted in each case prior to any substitution of counsel.

Attorneys shall designate the person or entity to receive payment for services provided to any assigned client during the period of the assignment by completing the form appended to this memorandum and then filing the form with MCILS. Any change in designation shall become effective on the date MCILS receives the form and acknowledges the change. MCILS counsel are advised that mail and faxes reach MCILS late and sometimes infrequently. Counsel are advised to use email to ensure timely application of any change. MCILS will not be responsible for payments made to the last designated person or entity prior to receipt and acknowledgment of a change. Counsel are further advised that MCILS anticipates a change to require filings through email only. If a policy requiring email filings is adopted, this paragraph shall not be construed to permit alternative means of filing.

Any attorney or firm that has relied on any previous policy, protocol, or practice of MCILS with respect to the allocation of fees shall take such steps as are necessary to realize the benefit of that reliance before 11:59:59 p.m. on October 31, 2021. These steps may include submitting an interim voucher. No attorney or firm shall rely on any previous policy, protocol, or practice of MCILS with respect to attorney payments on or after November 1, 2021.

II. Access to Defender Data / Subsequent billing and case management systems

Each attorney who is or becomes eligible to receive assignments from the Court, and to be approved to represent an assigned client through MCILS, will be provided with the use of an account through Defender Data, or through a subsequent MCILS billing and case management system. The attorney will not develop a property interest in that account.

Each attorney shall be personally and exclusively responsible for the account assigned to that attorney. Each attorney shall personally maintain access to the that account. No attorney may permit any other person to use the account, nor may any attorney provide any other person with that attorney's login credentials.

Each person who is subject to the rules of MCILS shall access the MCILS billing and case management system only through an account in the name of that person. This provision applies to both attorneys and staff.

A staff person may be assigned an account in the name of that staff person at the direction of an MCILS eligible attorney. Each staff person shall be personally and exclusively responsible for the account assigned to that staff person. Each staff person shall personally maintain access to the that account. No staff person may permit any other person to use the account, nor may any staff person provide any other person with that staff person's login credentials.

III. Responsibility for information related to assigned cases

Beginning November 1, 2021, the attorney assigned to represent a client is responsible to MCILS for all information recorded in, or submitted through, the MCILS billing and case management system related to that assigned matter. It is the responsibility of the assigned attorney to confirm the accuracy of the information submitted to MCILS for each case, irrespective of who performs a specific task for the client, enters time information, or submits a voucher.

Beginning November 1, 2021, each attorney assigned to represent a client is responsible for ensuring the creation, maintenance, and production of information related to that matter, irrespective of who performs a specific task for the client, enters time information, or submits a voucher.

Beginning November 1, 2021, both the attorney assigned to represent a client, and the individual or entity who receives payment for services rendered to an assigned client, shall be jointly and severally liable to MCILS for any overpayment in any assigned case. Issues of allocation, contribution, and subrogation shall lie strictly between the attorney assigned to represent the client and the individual or entity who received payment.

2. This protection extends to the expectation of payment for services rendered to an assigned elient by an attorney designated as eligible to participate in that case type, or otherwise specially approved by MCLS to participate in the specific case, on or before the date on which the attorney to whom the client was assigned advises MCLS that the attorney is no longer employed, partnered, or otherwise associated with individual or entity holding the expectation.

Country lawyer: Rural practices have rewards, but many areas of Maine need attorneys

Ben Everett, right, and his mentor, Adam Swanson, say Maine Law's Rural Law Fellowship Program is a good start for attracting rural attorneys. Everett now works for Swanson's Presque Isle firm, Swanson Law.

By Laurie Schreiber

As a newly minted lawyer who grew up in Aroostook County, Ben Everett's greatest dream was to return home to pursue his practice.

A Maine Law '21 graduate, his dream got a boost when he signed up for the Portland school's Rural Law Fellowship Program, which pairs students with rural lawyers who serve as mentors.
"For me that was a no-brainer," says Everett. "I said, 'I know exactly what I want to do when I graduate from law school."

Originally from Fort Fairfield, Everett was a non-traditional student who did a stint in the milityary, then worked in Presque Isle as paramedic for a decade.

Intrigued by the law, he enrolled at Maine Law and signed up for the fellowship program, serving two summers under the mentorship of Adam Swanson, who owns Swanson Law in Presque Isle.

Upon graduation in May, Everett was hired by Swanson as an associate attorney. The program was mutually beneficial.
"When he was participating in the fellowship, I set up a desk for him in my office. If a call came in, provided the caller consented, Ben would listen along and could ask me questions afterward," says Swanson. "He reviewed and memo'd files, and assisted in the drafting of pleadings. He'd also go to court with me."

Swanson offered Everett a position before he even graduated.
"All we had to do was give him office space and he was ready to roll," says Swanson.

A crisis

"Ready to roll" just about sums up a rural Maine attorney's practice. Rural lawyers typically have more generalized practices than those at large urban law firms. New attorneys can jump into the workings of the legal system more quickly.
"I have friends in larger firms who might not step into a courtroom for the first five years of their practice," says Everett. "But I know I'm going to participate in jury trial selection to do trials, which is a phenomenal opportunity for a young professional."

Despite the opportunities, rural Maine is experiencing a shortage of attorneys, partly due to 42 w lawyers choosing city over small-town life and partly because of the "graying of the bar."
"Not only do we have fewer attorneys, they're older attorneys as well," says Angela Armstrong, executive director of the Maine State Bar Association. "We're losing them at a faster rate now because they are retiring, and there aren't people who are backfilling."

According to the most recent data from the Maine Board of Overseers of the Bar, nearly $80 \%$ of Maine's practicing lawyers are located in just four counties: Cumberland, Kennebec, Penobscot and York, with more than half located in Cumberland County alone.

The fellowship - a collaboration between Maine Law, Maine Justice Foundation, Maine State Bar Association, and Maine Board of Overseers of the Bar - launched in 2017 to address changing bar demographics by pairing students with rural lawyers who act as mentors.

For many students, limited exposure to rural communities makes it difficult to envision what life and practice in a small Maine town would be like, which is a significant barrier to recruitment. Reflecting growing interest, the number of student and mentor applications has greatly exceeded available funding. Through summer 2021, the program enrolled 14 students and 14 mentors throughout Maine. Several students went into practice in rural Maine upon graduation.

The choice to practice in a rural area is largely a matter of personal preference.
"No. 1 is probably that they're from a rural area, and they want to return to a rural area to practice law," says Rachel Reeves, the fellowship program's director.

Reasons for not choosing a rural practice include lack of professional opportunities for a spouse or partner, lack of urban amenities and social circles, concern about the earning potential working in a smaller practice, and start-up costs for new practices in rural areas.

Supply and demand

Everett's mentor, Adam Swanson, is originally from Presque Isle and is also a Maine Law graduate. At one time, he thought he'd practice in Portland.
"I really enjoyed Portland," Swanson says. "I made good friends there and was pretty well settled in." But it was 2012 and the job market was tough. Swanson was clerking for a district court judge, who advised him to return to Aroostook County.
"He said, 'You should go back home and hang a shingle,"' Swanson recalls.

There were plenty of attorneys in urban Maine; not so much in rural Maine. Swanson started his firm as a general practice in 2013 and had plenty of work, eventually bringing in two more attorneys, which allowed him to focus on specialty areas.
"There are many attorneys here who developed a full case load in no time at all," says Swanson. "That speaks to supply and demand. There are plenty of people here who need attorneys and only so many attorneys to help."

He adds, "There's plenty of room for more."

Finding new hires

Tonya Johnson agrees. An attorney at C.W. & H.M. Hayes PA in Dover-Foxcroft, she ran into the shortage when trying to hire.

Originally from the "no streetlight town" of Clinton, as she puts it, Johnson knew she wanted a rural practice. A 1994 graduate of Boston's Suffolk University Law School, she joined Hayes that year. The firm, which dates to 1889, has had as many as five attorneys on staff. During Johnson's tenure, it averaged three until 2017, when the departure of two left Johnson as the lone attorney.

"I put out an ad to hire a new lawyer and got zero applicants," she says.

Stretched thin

The shortage means available lawyers are as busy as they want to be.
"They're working hard," says Armstrong. "They have that mindset of wanting to help everyone they can, but they are stretched thin because there are only so many of them in their area."

Clients might have to look outside their communities to hire a lawyer, or might represent themselves, pro se.
"One of the impacts for clients, and the judicial system itself, is that, if clients don't want to wait for an attorney or there isn't one nearby, they might choose to advocate on their own behalf, and be a pro se litigant," says Armstrong. "Clients are not necessarily getting the representation they really need by going pro se because they don't have the legal knowledge and expertise that lawyers possess, and it taxes the court system as well."

ADVERTISEMENT

Another challenge is covering all sides of a conflict.
"The fewer attorneys in a small town, the more conflicts of interest you'll run into overtime," says Ryan Rutledge. "If there are only two attorneys in the town, usually at least one of them has a conflict on any given case. When people call my office and say, 'I need help with this issue,' the first thing we do is a conflict check. It is not uncommon for me to have to turn away clients because of the conflicts that exist within our smaller community."

Rutledge is a 2019 Maine Law grad who was an inaugural Rural Practice Fellow through Maine Law's Rural Lawyer Pilot Project. He served first with Bemis & Rossignol in Presque Isle and then with Mills, Shay, Lexier & Talbot in Skowhegan, where he accepted an associate attorney position after graduation.

Originally from Savannah, Ga., and later working with a creative branding agency in Charleston, S.C., he and his wife fell in love with Maine when they visited in 2015. Law school beckoned, and he liked the idea of a rural practice.
"I had no desire to go to law school and then cut my teeth in some 80-to-100-hour-per-week firm," says Rutledge. "I have great quality of life. I do work quite a bit, but I have a lot of flexibility."

ADVERTISEMENT

Like Everett, he enjoys the ability to see cases through.
"After speaking with several colleagues from my graduating class, my understanding is that a lot of folks who went to work at bigger firms are working on big files and collaborating with other departments within the bigger firms," says Rutledge. "How many of those attorneys end up getting to see the courtroom as the case progresses? Usually only one or two. I'm averaging three times a week in court. And that was within the first year and a half of practice."

He adds, "It's much more enjoyable when you get to see the fruits of your labor. You get a lot more exposure to every part of the process, and a lot more often."

Solutions

In addition to the Rural Law Fellowship Program, Everett says he'd like to see more focus on training rural residents for the law.
"How can we eliminate barriers and open roads to people from these counties who might have significant barrier to picking up their lives and moving to Portland - people who want to come back to the area to stay, as opposed to trying to attract people who don't stay?" he says.

Other initiatives are in the works. In 2020, the Maine State Bar Association created a rural practice initiative committee. Working with Maine Law, the committee is looking at ways to attract students to rural careers. Before the pandemic stymied the committee's first career fair this year, intended to match students with rural firms, plenty of employers had signed on.
"It told us there are plenty of rural jobs," says Johnson, a member of the committee.
The committee meets regularly to develop resources to help new lawyers connect with retiring rural lawyers. That includes an online community message board to facilitate conversations between retiring and incoming lawyers.

In July, the Maine Legislature enacted a bill to provide an income tax credit up to $$ 6,000$ for five years for attorneys who agree to practice for at least five years in an underserved area.

In her testimony to the Legislature, Reeves called the shortage a crisis and said it not only limits access to justice but may also limit economic activity such as business expansions, real estate transfer ${ }_{4} 6^{6 n d}$ municipalities and nonprofits navigating complex regulatory requirements.

Says Rutledge, "It's a war of attrition. We need to make sure access to justice doesn't depend on your ZIP code."

Courts routinely order people convicted of lesser crimes to report to jail on a certain date. When they show up in York County, they're being told the sentence has been delayed.

Good afternoon, everyone. I am copying here the people I know who might best be able to address what I perceive to be a serious and developing issue here. D.A. Maloney, I have included you because I believe you are the current president of the prosecutor's association. If there is another person to whom I should send this email as a representative of the prosecution bar, please let me know. I'm happy to do that. Commissioners, you are blind copied for notice. Please engage with me if you would like to do so, but communication among you needs to be public.

As some of you are aware, Maine faces a serious issue with jails closed and/or overcrowded, and people being delayed in serving their sentences. This presents a serious violation of the rights of defendants. These are people who have bargained with the State for a determinate period of subjugation to the state's coercive power, but are facing extended and indeterminate periods of conditions of release and the inability to plan for housing, employment, education, services, or child care. I had been aware that some people had been turned away from the York County Jail and the Aroostook County Jail, but learned Monday night that it had become a practice to permit people to appear at the York County Jail without notice that they could not serve their sentences. This was a hypothetical problem until today.

This afternoon we received an email from a Commission attorney relating the story of his client. That client returned to Maine to serve a sentence, and was turned away. As a result, the client lost his job. The email is attached in-line below, as is my email of yesterday to all Commission attorneys.

If any of you can provide input or ideas about how to address this issue quickly, I would love to hear from you. My best idea is to convert these sentences to administrative release, but that will take time if its even possible.

Thank you for reading.

Hi All, I have a client who lost a job due to having to appear and then being turned away. He had moved out of state and returned specifically to serve his time. He had no advance notice of the situation (and neither did I) and had to wait about two weeks to get a determination from the Court with a new date, and before the second date, I filed a motion to postpone the reporting date again based on the first experience. It seems to me that for all sentenced individuals that notice should be provided well in advance of the reporting date as to whether they will be accepted or not. For these unusual times, a conversion to Admin. Release would seem to be a good way to clear some of the backlog and relieve the Courts and jails of a significant burden.

Good afternoon, counsel.

As you may be aware, the Maine Monitor published an article on Sunday concerning the York County jail issue we've discussed in the past. I learned for the first time from that article that the Court was not sending the stand-by order to Defendants, but rather Defendants were appearing at the jail prepared to serve their sentences, and being turned away. In addition to imposing what I continue to see as an unconstitutional burden on people who have already been sentenced, this practice endangers indigent defendants directly. Many indigent defendants struggle to maintain housing and employment, and to provide or obtain child care. A person who has secured leave from employment, or has terminated employment, and who has potentially given up housing to report to jail faces unfair challenges in simply living to the next appearance date.

We need a solution to this issue that allows indigent defendants to predict and plan for their incarceration after they have made their bargains with the state. I propose converting the sentences to administrative release so that these defendants are not subject to coercive power for longer than they have bargained for. I don't know of another solution at this point. If there is any way I can be useful on this point, I am available and willing to work toward a solution. I encourage you to engage with your clients to determine how they are impacted by this situation, and to take affirmative steps to put the issue before the Court for resolution in appropriate cases.
