KITTERY

Kittery (1649) is the oldest town in the state of Maine, but the actual date of its founding is shrouded in mystery. Should it be dated 1647, 1648, or 1649? The first date, for which no other source than The History of the State of Maine by William D. Williamson [Glazier, Masters & Co. 1832] has been found, is generally ignored. The earliest records of the town date from a meeting held on 19 March 1648, but formal incorporation was delayed till 16 Oct 1649 when at a meeting of the General Court held at Gorgeana: "the inhabitants of Piscataquack ... have the power of a Township." Included were "all the inhabitants from Braveboat Harbour, and so eight miles above Newichawannock, with the Isles of Shoals." The New England Historical and Genealogical Register [1853] Volume VII, page 134. For many years this township remained intact, but parts broke away gradually: Berwick, 1714 (subdivided into South Berwick, 1814, and North Berwick, 1831) and Eliot, 1810. York, the adjoining township which had been chartered as the city of Gorgeana in 1641, did not become a township till 1652.

The first settlement in Kittery occurred in 1631 at Great Works (now a part of South Berwick) under the direction of Ambrose Gibbons. [see Everett S. Stackpole, The First Permanent Settlement in Maine, published in Sprague's Journal of Maine History, Vol. 14 (1926), pp. 190-215] The next settlement occurred in what is now Eliot three or four years later. Most of Eliot was divided into small acreages, farmed independently, and this explains why Eliot was more heavily populated than other sections at the time Kittery was incorporated. The growth of lower Kittery must have been delayed inevitably by the extensive holdings of Thomas Withers and Francis Champernowne, and later of the Pepperrell, Cutts, and Gerrish families.

With such early beginnings, and fairly widespread settlement throughout the township by 1700, it is surprising to discover that Kittery's tombstones are late. No stones of the early pioneers are extant. Kittery has no inscribed tombstones dating from the seventeenth century. Its earliest stone marks the burial place of Elizabeth Eastwick, 1714, granddaughter of Dr. Reynald Fernald, a Portsmouth pioneer. This grave, with others unmarked, is found on the grounds of the Naval Prison at the U. S. Naval Shipyard. Next oldest is the slate stone of little Miriam Jackson, Sir William Pepperrell's niece, while the third marks the tomb of Col. Pepperrell and is a marble stone imported from England and erected about 1736, [The Life of Sir William Pepperrell, Baronet, by Usher Parsons, Boston, Little Brown & Co. 1856, pp. 29-30]. A few of the eighteenth century stones are later accretions, viz: Hon. Timothy Gerrish, 1755, Sarah Gerrish, 1770, Nathaniel Keen, Nathaniel Keen, Jr., 1759, John Shepherd, William Godsoe, and Lt. John Godsoe. Twenty-six eighteenth century stones have been found.

Many of the early burial places were marked only by field stones or by jagged pieces of slate uninscribed which continued to be used almost to the middle of the nineteenth century. This record is limited to inscribed stones, but I take the opportunity to mention the field stone and slate fragments found entirely in the early Godsoe plot, and several times used in the Mitchell plot at Mitchell Garrison and in the Manson plot near the Chesley Service Station among others. It is, of course, impossible to know who was buried where these stones lie; they are as nameless as many of those buried in the Pepperrell tomb where thirty persons were interred according to a nineteenth century account of remains found there.

After the above observations, it seems redundant to note that many of Kittery's burial grounds and stones have disappeared. The cemetery of the Moore family on Moore's Island, Kittery Point, is mentioned in early deeds of the property but no trace of it can be found. The late Melvin Blake (1873-1953) could recall an old cemetery on the edge of the lawn at Bray House; here presumably the Deering family was buried. The Gunnison genealogy mentions the disappearance of many tomb stones of that family from the lawn of the Lady Pepperrell House, where but one today remains. Lt. Commander Ralph Dennett, born in 1890, recalls seeing many times the stone of John Dennett who died in 1742 in a field opposite the present family plot on Dennett Road.

Occasionally dates given in this record can be corrected. Erosion has occurred, and the commonest resulting errors appear when 4 becomes 1, and 5 and 3 are rendered indistinguishable.

SEAVEY ISLAND CEMETERY

Kittery, York, Maine

Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Kittery, Maine. Location: At the southern end of the island, surrounded by storage buildings. Small chained-off cemetery. Not accessible to the general public

Bronze Plaque: "Family cemetery of Thomas Fernald, shipwright 1635-1699 and his wife Temperance Washington of Virginia. Sir Ferdinand Gorges in 1645 gave Fernald perpetual lease to this island for 2 shillings and 6 pence a year, practically a gift to the 12 year old boy. The Fernald house stood 100 yards west of the cemetery. The marked grave is that of their youngest daughter."
