(Hallowell, Maine) Andrew Landry, Esq. has joined Maine's Office of the Public Advocate as Deputy Public Advocate.

Landry joined the Office yesterday, July 29, after the retirement earlier this month of the previous Deputy Public Advocate, Agnes Gormley. He has practiced law in Maine since 1987, after graduating cum laude from Syracuse University and then the University of Maine Law School. Most recently he was a Partner at Preti Flaherty Beliveau & Pachios, LLP, practicing there for the last twelve years.

"I'm really pleased to have Andrew on board," said Barry Hobbins, Maine's Public Advocate. "He has a wealth of knowledge and experience in complex regulatory matters, really the ideal background for helping us protect the interest of Maine citizens. We will certainly miss Agnes, but Andrew is more than capable."

In pursuit of affordable, high quality utility services, the Office of the Public Advocate represents Maine utility consumers in any matter reviewed by the Public Utilities Commission, as well as in proceedings before state and federal agencies and courts.
