INTRODUCTION

The Bureau of Financial Institutions (“Bureau”) is Maine’s primary regulator of state-chartered financial institutions. At the close of 2013, the Bureau was responsible for the supervision and regulation of 42 financial institutions which included 12 credit unions, 1 savings and loan association, 4 commercial banks, 14 savings banks and 11 limited purpose banks. As of June 30, 2013, the total assets regulated by the Bureau were approximately $16.3 billion.

The statutory mission of the Bureau is to ensure the strength, stability and efficiency of the financial institutions that it regulates, encourage the development and expansion of financial services, ensure reasonable and orderly competition, protect consumers against unfair practices by institutions that provide consumer credit, provide consumer education, and encourage the development of economically sound credit practices.

The financial needs of Maine citizens and small businesses continue to be well served by Maine’s state-chartered banks and credit unions. Maine financial institutions remain in sound financial condition with sufficient capital, good earnings and acceptable asset quality. The Bureau continues to monitor the performance of state-chartered financial institutions within its realm of regulatory responsibility. In addition, the Bureau continues to explore new ways to assure the appropriate level of protections for Maine consumers.

Section I of this Report focuses on residential lending and foreclosure activity by state-chartered financial institutions. For several years, the Bureau has conducted a quarterly survey of state-chartered banks and credit unions to determine foreclosure activity and trends. The findings from these quarterly surveys have been used by both Maine lawmakers and the media to ascertain the extent of foreclosure activity in the state. Though the Bureau’s most recent foreclosure survey shows some mixed results, it does indicate continuing signs of stabilization. New foreclosure filings by state-chartered banks and credit unions declined throughout 2013 and foreclosure inventory has declined to its lowest level since year-end 2010.

Section II of this Report focuses on Bureau oversight activities and regulatory developments. In a continued effort to harmonize Maine's truth-in-lending laws with federal truth-in-lending laws, the Bureau promulgated Regulation Z-3 which became effective on October 15, 2013. In addition, Section II discusses the Bureau's participation with the Federal Reserve and other state banking regulators in a national research conference that explored the challenges and opportunities for community banks in the 21st century.

Section III of this Report focuses on the outreach efforts of the Bureau. In a continuing effort to provide consumers with up-to-date information concerning financial education, products and services, the Bureau's Consumer Outreach program serves as a resource to the public and can provide assistance when consumers have questions about their financial institutions. In addition, the Bureau's Consumer Outreach program helps to resolve consumers' account and loan-related complaints that they may have with their financial institutions. As in past years, many of the complaints handled by the Bureau in 2013 included issues related to consumer scams, credit cards, mortgage loans and checking accounts. Presently, the Bureau is participating with the Maine Council on Elder Abuse Prevention to address the issue of financial exploitation of the elderly. Financial institution employees are in a unique position to detect irregularities in an elder's behavior and account transactions. The Bureau is assisting with the revision of existing training programs for financial institutions to help them detect and report suspected financial exploitation.

Section IV of this Report reviews application activity in the Bureau. Although no new state-chartered financial institutions were chartered in 2013, there were several new branch applications. In addition, recent purchase and assumption applications approved by the Bureau resulted in the acquisition by two state-chartered banks of several branches formerly owned by nationally-chartered banks.

RESIDENTIAL LENDING AND FORECLOSURES

Foreclosure Survey

The Bureau continues to survey Maine's 31 state-chartered banks and credit unions regarding first-lien residential real estate mortgages. The foreclosure survey, which began in late 2006, has been revised several times during the past seven years, but no changes were made in 2013. The survey requests information from state-chartered institutions each quarter, including information about residential real estate loan originations and sales, foreclosures, and delinquencies.

First Lien Residential Mortgages

The number of first-lien residential real estate mortgages held by Maine state-chartered institutions continues to grow, totaling 61,700 as of September 30, 2013, representing an increase of 4,000, or 7%, compared to one year earlier. First-lien home equity lines of credit (HELOCs) represent 21.8% of outstanding first-lien residential real estate as of September 30, 2013, increasing slightly from 21.1% one year earlier. Table 1 shows that state-chartered institutions originated nearly 15,000 first-lien residential real estate loans from October 1, 2012, through September 30, 2013. This was approximately 2,000 more than the previous 12-month period beginning October 1, 2011. Mortgage refinancing comprises nearly one-half of annual originations. However, loan refinancings declined from 49% to 44% of total originations and purchases increased from 36% to 39% of originations for the 12-month period ending September 30, 2013. This trend is consistent with increased home sales in the State.

Institutions continue to sell a portion of their closed-end mortgages to the secondary market to reduce holdings in long-term, fixed-rate assets, a strategy to mitigate sensitivity to interest rate risk. Sales of first-lien residential real estate loans to the secondary market have declined over the past year, dropping from 34% to 27% of originations. Higher sales were reported mid-to-end 2012, slowing in the first half of 2013, and then dropping more significantly in third quarter 2013. This trend likely reflects some intent to retain loans made at the slightly higher interest rates in effect since June 2013.

Foreclosures: Initiated, In-process, and Completed

As of September 30, 2013, foreclosure inventory (loans in-process of foreclosure) has declined to its lowest level since year-end 2010. As seen in Chart 2, the number of completed foreclosures (62) exceeded the number of initiated foreclosures (58) during the third quarter for the first time since the Bureau began its foreclosure survey. The decline in foreclosure inventory was a result of fewer new or initiated foreclosures over the past year and a recent increase in completed foreclosures observed in third quarter 2013. Foreclosure inventory was also reduced by an increase in negotiated resolutions and short sales, which generally indicate a willingness of lenders to work with distressed borrowers. The reduction in initiated foreclosures among state-chartered financial institutions and reduced foreclosure inventory is consistent with the National Delinquency Survey conducted by The Mortgage Bankers Association. That survey, which covers a larger sample of Maine mortgage loans, shows a slight reduction in initiated foreclosures in Maine at the end of the third quarter 2013, and a decline in Maine's foreclosure inventory to its lowest level since year-end 2010.

Delinquency Trends

The Bureau's survey also collects past due data for early delinquencies (less than 90 days past due) and more severe delinquencies (90 days or more past due). As depicted in Chart 3, the early delinquency rate typically spikes at year-end, progressively improves through the year, and is at its lowest rate in the third quarter. This may be due to seasonal expenses that cause some borrowers to get temporarily behind on their loan payments at year-end. The rate of more severe delinquencies is far less seasonal but reports improvement nonetheless. It was greater than 1% for each quarter in the three-year period from September 2009 through September 2012, but in December 2012 the more severe delinquency rate dropped under 1% and has remained at that level over the last four quarters ending September 2013. An increase in the total delinquency rate, driven by the aforementioned early delinquency trend, is anticipated again for year-end 2013. However, if the current overall trend continues, it appears, at the time of this writing, that the total delinquency rate is likely to be less than the 2.50% reported at year-end 2012.

Summary

Though the Bureau’s foreclosure survey of state-chartered banks and credit unions shows some mixed results, it does indicate continuing signs of stabilization. New foreclosure filings declined throughout 2013 and foreclosure inventory has declined to its lowest level since year-end 2010.

SECTION II

BUREAU OVERSIGHT ACTIVITIES AND REGULATORY DEVELOPMENTS

Regulation Z-3

As part of the Bureau of Financial Institutions' and the Bureau of Consumer Credit Protection's ongoing efforts to harmonize State truth-in-lending laws with federal truth-in-lending laws, and in keeping with "An Act to Amend the Maine Consumer Credit Code to Conform with Federal Law" passed in 2011, the Bureaus promulgated Regulation Z-3 in October 2013. Regulation Z-3 aligns state law with new and significant consumer protection provisions found in federal truth-in-lending regulations.

Since 2011, federal truth-in-lending regulations have been the responsibility of the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB). Using its new authority, the CFPB re-codified Regulation Z (Truth-in-Lending) and Regulation M (Consumer Leasing) as 12 C.F.R. Parts 1026 and 1013, respectively, and began promulgating and modifying those regulations consistent with the requirements of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act.

The most notable of the new federal regulations captured in Maine's Regulation Z-3 extends existing ability-to-repay requirements that had previously applied only to higher-priced mortgage loans to, generally, all closed-end residential mortgage loans. These ability-to-repay requirements impose an obligation on creditors to determine and verify that borrowers have the ability to repay their mortgage loans by evaluating a number of factors, including the borrower's income, employment status, assets, and debts. These regulations create two standards for verifying a borrower's ability to repay, depending upon whether or not the mortgage offered is a "qualified" mortgage as defined in the new federal regulations. If a lender makes a "qualified" (or plain) mortgage, its burden of demonstrating that a borrower has the ability to repay is somewhat diminished because a "qualified" mortgage must contain features that lower the default risk for borrowers. Generally, "qualified" mortgages must have the following features: regular periodic payments; 30-year maximum term; 3% points and fees cap; sound underwriting; verification of income and debt; and a 43% debt-to-income cap.

These new regulations not only provide greater protections for consumers, they also create legal safeguards for those creditors offering “qualified” mortgages, thereby incentivizing creditors to offer these types of lower-risk, more transparent, products.

Importantly for Maine’s financial institutions, Regulation Z-3 also captures those federal regulations that expand the definition of what a “qualified” mortgage is by including what are known as small creditor portfolio qualified mortgages. Small portfolio creditors are those creditors that keep the loan in portfolio for at least three years, have assets of less than $2 billion (subject to annual adjustment), and originate (together with their affiliates) no more than 500 closed-end first-lien covered transactions a year. Unlike standard qualified mortgages, there is no specific debt-to-income requirement for a loan to qualify as a small creditor portfolio qualified mortgage.

Furthermore, the new federal regulations that have been incorporated into Regulation Z-3 provide for what are known as rural balloon and temporary balloon qualified mortgages. Again, these types of qualified mortgages are limited to loans held in portfolio for at least three years by small creditors. For the first two years, small creditors, whether or not they operate in rural or underserved areas, will be eligible to make these types of qualified mortgages. Thereafter, they will need to operate in a rural or underserved area in order to be eligible to make these types of mortgages. These rural balloon and temporary balloon mortgages cannot have a rate that increases, must have a minimum 5-year term and maximum 30-year term, cannot be interest-only or negatively amortize, and must have points and fees that are no more than 3% of the total loan amount. Like the small creditor portfolio qualified mortgages, in order for a loan to qualify as a rural balloon or temporary balloon qualified mortgage, the creditor does not have to establish that the borrower’s debt-to-income ratio is 43% or less.

The CFPB’s decision to expand the definition of what a “qualified” mortgage is to include portfolio loans made by small creditors was in recognition that these loans, like standard “qualified” mortgages, are low risk and that the new regulations would have otherwise inappropriately burdened small institutions. The CFPB’s expansion of “qualified” mortgages was also in recognition that these types of lenders know their customers well, are not known to make predatory loans, and are confident enough in the loans they make to retain them in their portfolios.

Also included in the definition of qualified mortgage are loans eligible to be purchased or guaranteed by the Federal National Mortgage Association and the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation, as well as those loans eligible to be insured or guaranteed by certain other federal agencies.

Other recent federal rulemakings that are captured by Regulation Z-3 impose certain restrictions on how loan originators are compensated, impose new mortgage loan servicing requirements, impose requirements for appraisals for higher-risk mortgage loans, expand the definition of high-cost mortgage loans, impose limits on prepayment penalties, and lengthen the time for which escrow accounts established for higher-priced mortgage loans must be maintained.

Lastly, Regulation Z-3 directs lenders to adhere to the federal mandatory compliance deadlines in the new federal regulations.

Regulation Z-3 thus accomplishes three important objectives: (1) it provides additional consumer credit protections to Maine consumers; (2) it evens the compliance burdens borne by Maine financial institutions with those of their federal counterparts by keeping state and federal truth-in-lending requirements in close alignment, and; (3) it ensures the preservation of the Bureaus' ability to enforce truth-in-lending laws by keeping Maine's truth-in-lending laws substantially similar to federal truth-in-lending laws.

Community Banking in the 21st Century

Following the recent financial crisis and the passage of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act in 2010, financial institutions throughout the country have been challenged by a new and ever-evolving financial and regulatory landscape. In order to better understand the challenges and opportunities created in this new landscape, the Federal Reserve System, together with state banking regulators from around the county, met in October in St. Louis, Missouri for a national research conference titled "Community Banking in the 21st Century."

Community bankers, academics, policymakers and bank supervisors attended the conference to focus on the challenges and opportunities that community banks face in the 21st century. In addition to Superintendent LaFountain, Maine was also represented by Rick Vail, President of Mechanics Savings Bank and the current Chairman of the Maine Bankers Association.

In preparation for the meeting, state banking regulators were asked to meet with community bankers in their home states to discuss specific industry issues. Superintendent LaFountain traveled throughout the state to have one-on-one interviews with community bank presidents in order to discuss the challenges and opportunities for Maine's community banks, and to review the role community banks play within individual Maine communities.

The greatest opportunity for community banks in Maine includes increasing market share and growth, according to Superintendent LaFountain's findings. Maine banks can capitalize on management's knowledge of the community, according to the survey respondents. Survey respondents also identified the greatest local challenge for community banks as weak loan demand and margin compression resulting from the prolonged period of low interest rates.

Maine bankers further noted that most banking business models can work provided they are properly executed. In addition, nearly all of the respondents indicated that regulations are excessive and burdensome and that the costs of compliance are becoming too expensive.

A state-by-state summary of these bankers' observations is included in the report at: www.csbs.org/news/csbswhitepapers/Documents/FINALPUBLICATION.pdf.

Nationally, according to the observations elicited from community bankers, some of the most cited opportunities involve community banks differentiating themselves from larger banks. Bankers noted several opportunities arising from individuals and small businesses preferring to work with community banks rather than larger banks. This includes taking advantage of the knowledge community bankers have of their service areas and of customer frustration with large-bank fees, and emphasizing their personalized customer service.

The Federal Reserve of St. Louis will again serve as host for the conference in 2014.

SECTION III

CONSUMER OUTREACH

Consumer Outreach Program

The Bureau's Consumer Outreach Program allows consumers to ask questions and raise concerns related to financial institutions and their products and services, and to receive objective information about their concerns. Consumers may contact the Bureau by phone, mail, encrypted email or in person. The Bureau works with consumers and financial institutions to help resolve account and loan-related complaints. The Bureau also provides financial education and referral services, and participates in efforts to help consumers, including elderly consumers, avoid scams and other forms of financial exploitation.

The ability to work directly with consumers in this manner helps the Bureau identify consumer-related issues and trends that may require closer evaluation during on-site examinations. The Bureau has a website that includes a consumer library, reports and statistics, and relevant laws and regulations. The consumer library contains many links to information on financial literacy, foreclosure, and avoidance of scams.

Because the Bureau is the primary regulator of state-chartered financial institutions, it is most effective when intervening in disputes involving Maine-chartered financial institutions. When a federally-chartered financial institution is involved, the Bureau, when possible, educates consumers about the issues and then assists them pursue the complaint through a federal regulator with enforcement authority over the federally-chartered institution.

Financial Exploitation of the Elderly - New Disclosure Guidance

Financial exploitation of the elderly is a serious issue in Maine and throughout the United States. Regulators and financial institutions recognize the issue, and understand that identifying and reporting abuse will become more urgent as the baby boom population ages. Older adults generally have resources, such as savings or home equity, and are targeted by scam artists, who sometimes include family members and caregivers. Some elderly experience cognitive decline, making it more difficult for them to recognize and prevent scams and financial exploitation.

Financial institution employees, particularly tellers, are in a unique position to detect irregularities in an elder's behavior and account transactions. This ability to spot problems makes them a great resource for law enforcement and other professionals who wish to assist in the prevention of elder financial abuse. The difficulty for financial institutions has been determining when it is proper to report instances of suspected financial abuse, and where to report the information. The reporting process is complicated because financial institutions must comply with State and federal privacy laws that limit when financial institutions may share customers' nonpublic information.

The privacy laws in the Maine Banking Code were updated in 2009 and 2011 to encourage reporting of financial exploitation. The Maine law provides immunity to financial institutions that make good faith reports of exploitation of dependent or incapacitated adults. The Maine law also permits reporting to the extent permissible under federal privacy law. However, until recently, some financial institutions were uncertain as to the extent of permissible reporting under the federal law. In September of 2013, federal regulators tried to clear up some of the uncertainty by issuing Interagency Guidance on Privacy Laws and Reporting Financial Abuse of Older Adults. The guidance clarifies that reporting suspected financial abuse of older adults to appropriate local, state, or federal agencies does not, in general, violate the privacy provisions of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act or its implementing regulations.

As part of the Maine Council on Elder Abuse Prevention's financial exploitation working group, the Bureau is helping to reinvigorate existing training programs for financial institutions developed in part by Maine Adult Protective Services and, in so doing, highlight the latest federal privacy guidance. The goal is to encourage financial institutions to continue to train personnel to spot red flags indicating exploitation and to clarify what resources exist for reporting suspected financial exploitation.

SECTION IV APPLICATIONS

Application Activity

Application activity by Maine state-chartered financial institutions remains primarily focused on branching, which accounts for ten of the 15 applications processed during the twelve-month period between November 1, 2012 and October 31, 2013. Included in the six new branch establishments was a third branch in New Hampshire by Kennebunk Savings Bank. (Its first branch opened in 2011, and its second branch opened in 2012.) Four of the new branches were opened in central Maine (Auburn, Brunswick and two in Augusta) and the remaining new branch was opened in southern Maine (Kennebunk).

There were two purchase and assumption applications, both of which have been approved by the Bureau. These include: 1) Skowhegan Savings Bank's application to acquire certain assets and assume certain liabilities of five Franklin county branches from the Camden National Corporation; and 2) Machias Savings Bank's application to acquire certain assets and assume certain liabilities of six northern Maine branches from The Bank of Maine.

The three remaining applications/activities related to ownership interest in insurance subsidiaries, two from banks and one from a credit union.
