For many years students have been in an environment of constant hand-holding. I see the Common Core Standards as attempting to push students to a higher level of rigor by forcing them to completely harder tasks with less teacher assistance. Of course this is a difficult shift for both teachers and parents to grasp and thus there have been many growing pains along the way. The only course now though is to continue pushing forward.

--

Danielle Sylvia
English Teacher
Lisbon High School